WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

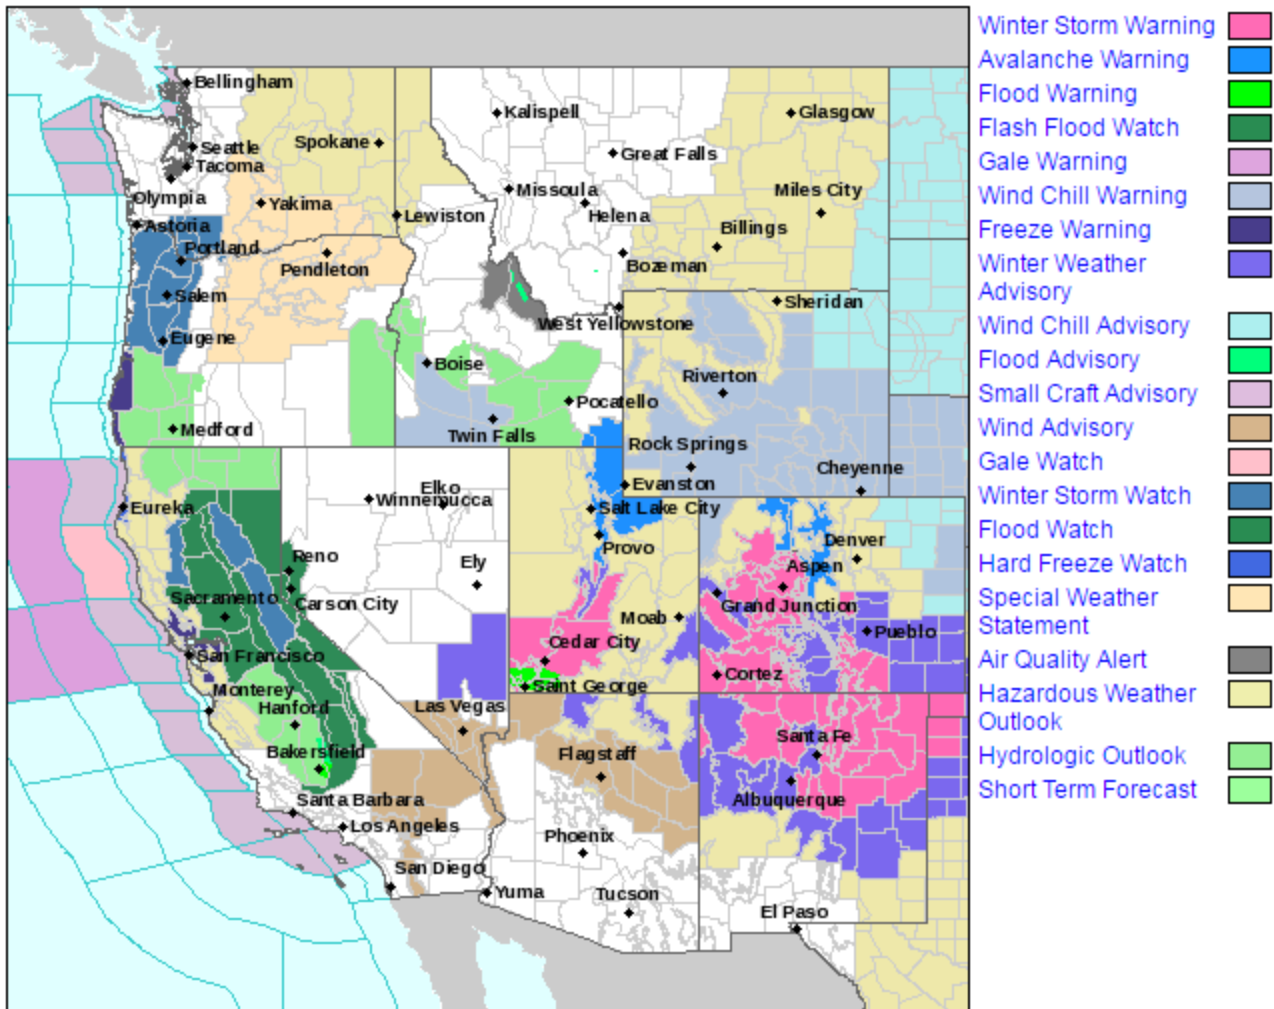

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

A series of very wet Pacific winter storms will continue to impact the region for the next week to ten days. The current system is gradually exiting the region, but the last snow showers from it will end late today in the Lake Tahoe region. Light to locally moderate northwest to northeast surface winds will gradually move in behind this system - in northern areas tonight and tomorrow and farther south in the evening and early tomorrow. A second storm system will arrive tomorrow night or Saturday and continue into early next week. More waves of moderate to heavy precipitation will follow all of next week. Snow levels will generally be 2000-4000 feet in the north and 3000-5000 feet in the south - at times a bit higher as a wave of precipitation approaches and then sometimes lower at the tail end of each wave. Gusty southeast to southwest winds will also be common as each wave approaches. Total water equivalent for the next week could be 10-15 inches in the mountains and 2-5 inches at lower elevations.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Zonal flow will bring showers to much of the region through this evening. Most foothill and mountain locations will receive an additional half inch to an inch of rainfall and most coastal and valley locations will receive between a quarter inch and a half inch of rainfall. However, some Sierra locations may see up to 3 inches of additional rainfall. The snow level will be between 6,000 and 8,000 feet. West winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph will surface across the mountain ridges and desert passes through this evening. A weak ridge of high pressure will move over California bringing dry conditions and light winds to the entire area tomorrow. Zonal flow will set up again across California Saturday and continue through the end of next week bringing periods of rain to the region at times. Central California will see much more rainfall than Southern California and have more rainy days. 6 to 12 inches of rainfall will fall over the foothills and mountains of Central California, while the coastal and valley locations of Central California receive 1 to 4 inches of rainfall Saturday through Monday. Southern California will receive less than an inch of rainfall during this time, with most of the rainfall occurring Monday. The snow level will increase to around 10,000 feet this weekend and then drop back down to between 6,000 and 8,000 feet Monday. There will be periods of strong and gusty south to west winds over the wind prone mountain and desert areas Saturday through the end of next week. Temperatures will be mainly near normal through the end of next week, with 40s to low 50s in the mountains and mid 50s to mid 60s in the valleys.
